dedication

dean lewis w. furda

the hard line is not an overgrown path as far as dean furda is concerned. direct, justifiable action is an aspect of his character which is readily employed when a student-centered problem arises. concurrent with dean furda's role as an exacting administrator, however, is a man of understanding and concern. students are by no means the easiest on one's patience—nor are they always easy to understand. yet dean furda has managed to maintain the respect of the students even though his judgments sometimes contradict their desires.

hence, we dedicate the 1967 key to dean lewis w. furda, dean of student affairs.

as summer fades and the sweltering heat of august is replaced by the clear crispness of september, there swells on the campus a spirit which is renewed annually. football—the crack of shoulder pads and the ringing cry of the fans cuts the saturday afternoon stillness as the spark of competition rages into a flame. tired aching bodies become lean and hard; movements become swift and precise as the comradeship of sport embraces the veteran and welcomes the new. reading, writing and arithmetic schedules have added to them “chalk talks” where players ponder chalked circles and x’s. the spirit sweeps through the campus, and player and fan alike are caught up and held in its spell. the season swings into action. chanting fans strain their voices, and begrimed players strain their bodies and minds for the touchdown that will bring with it the thrill of victory and the name of champion.

watch him when he warms up—see how quick he moves, or how strong he looks, or whether he looks like a smart wrestler or a muscle man. warm up yourself—try to look as quick, strong, and smart as you can—make the other guy worry—make the awful tension right before the match pry on his nerves, strength and confidence. the meet moves on. you're to wrestle next, so its behind the bench for exercises—loosen up. think of moves, series, the score—how good it would feel to win. three minutes—third period—and the anxiety builds—your stomach tightens—get loose! be ready! one minute—all at once, think, worry, loosen, get intense—get angry, get mean. buzzer—your turn—off with your warm up jacket—up kneepads—teammates encourage—step unto the mat. Now! it is you and him—only two—it's all yours, just you, and no one else. cross—shake—ready—whistle—wrestle. and it is only the other guy—and you.

the gym becomes silent as the referee takes his position for the opening jump. move up to the line now. keep your eyes on the ball—tense—bend your knees and leap, stretch—stretch arms, legs, body—reach out—reach out. it's yours. now move the ball down the court. be careful, be smart. pass the ball around—pass—dribble—pass—set—shoot. if it goes in, two points—if not, rebound and go at it again, or defend, run to your goal. and start all over again.

sometimes you just don't know—sometimes you really wonder: is it worth it? and sometimes you're so sure it's worth it that you wish you could start over and change so many of the things that are now unchangeable. but you're definitely sure so rarely, and joy is infrequently abounding. and your staff says, "just think how much better it would have been if . . ."—and the hypothetical "ifing" goes on and on until it's just one big supposition. yet how much worse would it have been without these sometimes overly retrospective people? how many extra hours would have been spent in performing this temporary, oft-attempted task had i not had the help of these few? i especially thank you, dan yokas, donna hullinger, and lori kotelman, for your hours, patience, and creativity—i thank and acknowledge your willingness to enter a situation of uncertainty with no assurance greater than my appreciation of your help. i also thank those people who, although they did not spend a great number of hours in creating the '67 key, gave somewhat of themselves—by one means and in one form or another—to create something more than a mere book—an object which should give oneself a feeling of fulfillment and a certain degree of personal pride.
